

Introduction

Hope in the Word

“My son, eat thou honey, because it is good; and the honeycomb, which is sweet to thy taste:

Know also that wisdom is like honey for you:

If you find it, there is a future hope for you,

and your hope will not be cut off.”

- Proverbs 24:13-14 (KJV)

Sometimes life can feel like an aphorism, like the brushstroke of a master painter, skillfully rendering the complexities of the human experience onto the canvas of time. It is the melody of a maestro's symphony, orchestrating moments into harmonious phrases that resonate deep within the heart. Words play a powerful role in our existence. Personally, I've always been amazed by the first chapter of the Bible, Genesis 1, where we are given an account that the Creator of the universe spoke our world into existence. Declaring, “let there be light”, and it was so. Throughout my journey of life, I've found the Holy Bible to be a powerful tool when faced with difficult situations, a glimmer of hope in my melancholy. Much like our universe in the beginning when it was formless and void, hope lives in the unexplained, the unpredictable, the dark. The Holy Bible, like a treasure trove, offers wisdom that's as sweet as honeycomb, while guiding us through the mysteries of existence. In my own personal battles, I found myself detached from my own being, trapped in the grips of anxiety and depression. How did I end up there? The truth is that I allowed pain and trauma to build up inside. However, building an intimacy with Christ, and delving deep into the proverbs, parables and stories documented in the Bible has allowed me to explore the intricate layers of mental health and wellness, unraveling aspects of myself along the way. This transformative experience has ignited a profound calling within me to share my insights of the Holy Bible. As we savor its verses, we can find solace and inspiration, drawing from its wisdom to navigate our unique journeys.

Chapter 1

Wisdom is better than silver and gold

“Wisdom is a shelter as money is a shelter, but the advantage of knowledge is this: Wisdom preserves the life of its possessor.”

- Ecclesiastes 7:12 (NIV)

King Solomon in the Bible is renowned for his wisdom. That old aphorism, “there’s nothing new under the sun” (Eccl. 1:9), comes straight from Solomon’s book of Ecclesiastes. Like busy bees in a honeycomb, we shape our world. In our ever-evolving society, the pursuit of happiness has become a relentless race, driven by an algorithmic onslaught of messages that tantalize us with the promise of looking flawless, amassing wealth beyond measure, and possessing the epitome of everything desirable. The lifestyle portrayed in the media has reached such heights of unattainability that keeping up seems like an insurmountable feat. As we find ourselves scrolling through Instagram, TikTok or Facebook, we are met with a carefully curated collection of photos, videos, and memes, showcasing a sea of influencers immersed in a constant state of "living their best lives" — graduating from prestigious institutions, embarking on exotic adventures, or acquiring lavish things. However, behind the mesmerizing masks we wear for the world, a profound sense of pain often resides, that concealed from public view. For some of us, there is a pressure to conform to society's exaggerated expectations, which many times can cause a cycle of stress, anxiety, and self-doubt. The quest for perfection, both in appearance and achievements, becomes a relentless battle, leaving us internally dissatisfied with ourselves. The constant exposure to carefully constructed narratives of success can breed feelings of inadequacy, as we struggle to measure up to the idealized versions of happiness and accomplishment that permeate our screens.

Our society, while flourishing in many aspects, finds itself grappling with the profound impact it has on our mental well-being. Despite some of the hardships that we may face in our culture today, when we investigate God's word, we are able to peel back the layers, shatter the illusion and embrace the compassion and connection that God had in store for us through the timeless wisdom of Bible. Proverbs 9:10 states, "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom and the knowledge of the Holy One is understanding." I still vividly remember stumbling upon this passage as a teenager, my eyes fixated on the word "fear" that seemed to jump off the page. It left me perplexed, wondering why the almighty creator of the universe would require us to be afraid in order to attain even a glimpse of wisdom? At the time I didn't understand, it took years of exploration and questioning my beliefs to truly come to understanding. In a quest for answers, Solomon's Ecclesiastical wisdom continued linger in my mind. Over time, I came to understand that the word "fear," when interpreted within its true essence, carries the profound essence of reverential awe and deep respect. With this revelation I was filled with appreciation and gratitude. I began to meditate on the vastness and timelessness of God, Solomon's Ecclesiastical wisdom continued linger in my mind.

Chapter 2

Pain

*"Surely our griefs He Himself bore,
And our sorrows He carried;
Yet we ourselves esteemed Him stricken,
Smitten of God, and afflicted."*

- Isaiah 53:4

Some people ask questions like, "if God is real, why is there pain and suffering?" This isn't the easy question to answer, we all have or will experience hurt and trauma in our lifetime. These experiences can be emotionally, spiritually, and even physically wounding. Depending on the circumstances, the pain may linger. The unfortunate truth is that in life pain is inevitable. Is it wrong for a believer to experience depression? Shouldn't the joy that comes from the Lord be our source of strength? How can we sing songs of peace and joy when we're burdened with overwhelming sadness? Does this imply that there's something flawed in our faith? Absolutely not, unless we choose to disregard the teachings of the Bible. One of the most profound realizations I've had is that God uses our brokenness to build something better. The Bible tells us that humanity has fallen however God doesn't give up on His creation, He does a new thing and when accept Jesus Christ as a Lord and savior we are new creatures (2 Corinthians 5:17).

When pain visits us it's easy to become bitter or hopeless. However, God has declared himself to be our creator and our redeemer. Jesus Himself experienced profound sorrow, and the apostle Paul was intimately familiar with the internal battles we face. In fact, we have an entire book of Psalms that regularly articulates the depths of sorrow, anguish, and fear. We will all experience a degree of pain in our lifetime, but we don't have to suffer in our pain, instead, we can choose to trust God despite what may be going on. This is where we find that glimpse of hope. Hope isn't like optimism, it's when understand that we are in a dark time, but there seems to a glimmer of light somewhere. Knowing that wisdom from the Lord feeds our soul and gives us the hope for the future that we need in the middle of the changing seasons of life. Transitions in life are very difficult and knowing this truth can help you hold to the hope only God can provide. It's powerful to know that God, isn't just watching humanity wreak havoc on itself, but instead He came down and experienced all our human emotions, feelings and pain. Although 700 years before Jesus, the prophet Isaiah gives us a glimpse of the pain and sacrifice that Jesus Christ bore on the cross.

Chapter 3

Balance

"To every thing there is a season, and a time to every purpose under the heaven"

- Ecclesiastes 3:1

Life is a balance. We must wake up each day with an open mind and heart. Life is about progress. In progression there is an element of change. Change is not always easy but it is vital for progress. We need balance. There is a time for all things. There is a time to rest, and time to wake, a time to plant your seeds and a time to harvest the garden. It's important that we find that balance within ourselves. The Bible teaches us the importance of finding balance in various aspects of life. Ecclesiastes 3:1-8 speaks about there being "a time for everything, and a season for every activity under the heavens." This passage highlights that life is composed of different seasons, and each season has its purpose. It encourages us to embrace the diversity of experiences and find harmony in the different aspects of our lives. Like sharps and flats, highs and lows, in life, there appears to be a natural ebb and flow. It is important to remember that we will always rise again after we fall. The truth is the waves of life can sometimes become rocky.

Growing up in New Orleans, Louisiana, where the weather can be notoriously stormy, I can vividly recall being frightened as a child by some of the thunderstorms that would sweep through the city. Whenever our power would go out, my mother would sing "Through the Storm" by Yolanda Adams, and that song has always remained deeply ingrained in my memory. Later, I came across the accounts of Mark, Matthew, and Luke, who were traveling across the seas with Jesus when a furious storm suddenly engulfed their boat. All three disciples openly admitted to feeling overwhelmed with anxiety during this tempestuous ordeal. In their desperate state, they awakened Jesus from his peaceful rest, and He questioned the reasons behind their anxiety. He then, with a single word, calmed the storm, and just like that, the sea became tranquil. Reflecting upon these accounts, I believe there is a powerful lesson to be learned. Like the raging winds of the sea, our minds and thoughts can, at times, become a tempest of their own. However, the Bible gives us a constant reminder to be anxious for nothing. When we discover the promises of God's word, we are filled with a peace that surpasses understanding (Philippians 4:5-7). In Psalms 109:103, the psalmist passionately proclaims, "How sweet are Your words to my taste! Yes, sweeter than honey to my mouth!"

Chapter 4

Logos

"In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God." John 1:1

The Greek language played a significant role in the composition of the New Testament of the Bible. As someone who has delved into biblical literature, I have discovered the captivating nature of John 1:1. In Genesis 1:1, we learn that God spoke the world into being, and approximately a millennium and a half later, the Apostle John gives an account of the Word, in its original Greek language, the term "logos" is used to describe its presence at the beginning of creation. John's use of "logos" transcends its common meaning of "word," "speech," or "message." In John's context, the term carries a transcendent significance. It is said that "logos" is associated with divine reasoning or "God's mind." The resonance of this concept can be traced back to ancient Greece, where a philosopher named Heraclitus introduced the term "Logos". For Heraclitus, logos represented a divine intelligence, a rational force that governs the very essence of our existence. While Heraclitus may have been the first to articulate this concept, it continues to captivate the minds of philosophers, scientists, and thinkers across generations. When meditating upon these concepts it reminds us that there's something greater, something transcendent, at work in the universe. "My meditation of him shall be sweet: I will be glad in the LORD" (Psalm 104:34). Truly God has a masterplan. Personally, as an individual that has been prone to overthinking and anxiety, gaining an understanding of God's promises through Jesus Christ has given me a peace of mind through mediating on the Word. In the Christian expression of this communication, we find a profound message of inspiration and hope. It is beautifully revealed through the embodiment of divinity in human form – Jesus Christ, the living manifestation of the "Word become flesh (John 1:14)." Christianity unveils the extraordinary potential for a profound union between humanity and the divine, a harmonious merging of the man and the Creator through the Spirit of Jesus Christ.

Meditation is profound encounter with God that goes beyond the ordinary. It's about immersing ourselves in the depths of our existence, basking in the divine presence that surrounds us. In this practice, we embrace the power of surrender, letting go of our own limited perspectives, the demands of time, and the ever-pressing priorities that consume our lives. Instead, we open ourselves up to something greater, something awe-inspiring. "He has made everything beautiful in its time. He has also set eternity in the human heart; yet no one can fathom what God has done from beginning to end (Ecclesiastes 3:11)." It's the idea that there is a universal intelligence woven into the tapestry of the cosmos, guiding and shaping the universe with purpose and order.

Think of logos as the master conductor of the cosmic symphony, orchestrating the dance of particles, the birth of stars, and the ebb and flow of life itself, “Where can I go from your Spirit? Where can I flee from your presence?” (Psalm 139:7). It's a notion that sparks wonder and curiosity, inviting us to contemplate the grand mysteries that surround us. Embrace your divine nature and let your light shine brilliantly. Psalm 139 reveals how God pursues us. Before we were born, God had a plan for our lives, and is actively drawing us to himself. This psalm shows us how God uses his infinite knowledge and power to bring us closer to him, for you are a unique masterpiece.
